

Significant correlations are represented by lines connecting the two boxes. A green, solid line represents a significant relevant connection and a gray, dashed line represents a significant non-relevant relationship. No line means that no statistical significance was found in the correlation.

